The California Public Utilities Commission’s (CPUC) Self-Generation Incentive Program (SGIP) is providing these incentives. RCEA encourages our customers to reach out to an approved developer to reserve any potential incentives and rebates from SGIP as they are going fast.

Take advantage of rebates available for a limited time for installing energy storage technology such as batteries at homes, businesses, and public facilities. Energy storage can reduce utility bills and keep the lights on during a power outage.

RCEA is negotiating a contract with one of these approved developers, Swell Energy, to implement a program specifically for our Community Choice Energy customers, which would add value to the SGIP. Swell Energy has said that residential incentive sign-ups may be filled up in less than three weeks, and we encourage you to contact them to see if you would qualify. Swell Energy is just one of the developers under SGIP, and they will be working with local companies for installation.

The funds are also available for critical facilities that support community resilience in the event of a PSPS event or wildfire, such as:

- Police stations, fire stations, emergency operations centers, 911 call centers, medical facilities, hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, nursing homes, public and private gas, electric, water, wastewater and flood control facilities, dialysis centers, jails and prisons, cooling centers, homeless shelters, grocery stores, corner stores, and markets and supermarkets with less than $15 million in annual receipts.

To check if you qualify and begin the application process, visit swellenergy.com/rcea or call Swell Energy at (800) 898-1832 or contact one of the other developers on RCEA’s website.

For more details, including eligibility links and a complete list of approved contractors, visit RedwoodEnergy.org, email info@redwoodenergy.org, or call (707) 269-1700.